CLERK HAS TROUBLE

Man Who Handles Mail Finds Many Queer Missives.

Mostly Due to Carelessness, But Idiotic Addresses and Various Kinds of Cranks Add Greatly to His Confusion.

Washington.—It does seem an easy matter to address a letter properly in order that it may slip through Uncle Sam's postal mill as speedily and safely as possible. No racking of the intellect is required in the process and but little physical exertion—simply the inscribing of a name and address. Yet in the face of this, ask the man who superintends the sorting of the mail in the city post office about it and if he does not throw up his hands and fervently cry: "Our lucky stars preserve us from those who don't or won't know how to address a letter!" it will be because he is too busy to do more than think his opinion.

Of the thousands of letters which go through the office weekly it is surprising to learn that hundreds of them, through faulty addresses, cause the post office people almost as much trouble as the handling of those that are in proper form. And the acts of this same class are also the most potent factor in keeping the wheels of industry humming in the dead letter office all the year round.

Carelessness on the part of letter writers is the cause of the appearance of most of these bothersome missives, and in this line Washington is entitled to a seat in the grandstand, as the records of the office will show. It is the careless person who drops a letter adorned with a stamp but unadorned with an address into the box; it is a kindred spirit who mails a letter to a friend in some distant city which the writer locates in a state having no such city within its borders.

Have to Fill in City.

It is one with a similar failing who directs his letter to a certain street and leaves a blank space below for the post office officials to fill in any city or town it may occur to them the street is situated in. It is carelessness that brings to the post office a neatly addressed and stamped envelope which is, however, unsealed and devoid of contents, just the sort of an affair to cause a fearful breach between two correspondents, one angry because of an unanswered letter and the other indignant because his tale of the empty envelope is discredited. But to tell of the devious and aggravating ways of the careless letter writer would take a day in itself.

Ignorance also plays its part in the letter game, as a few select specimens will show. It was certainly an ignorant person who not long ago addressed a letter to "His honorableness the President," leaving it to the superior wisdom of the postmaster to guess whether the letter was a petition to the president of the United States for a position or an appeal to the president of a glue trust for a job as laborer.

Childlike Faith of Some.

Ignorance or a childlike belief in the supernatural powers of the postal officials also inspired the following effusive, though vague, inscription of a rather dirty envelope dropped in the main office:

"To my cousin, Martha Small, who lives in Organ and who was goin' to move to Montannel."

Another missive with a nomadic address was odorous with mystery. It was directed:

"Samuel Kramer, Milwaukee, Wis. If not, try Columbus, O., or maybe Dallas, Tex., or perhaps, Bangor, Me."

A piece of handiwork worthy of the immortal "Handy Andy" is exhibited by a letter which, besides the stamp, bore only on its face this writing:

"If not delivered in ten days, postmaster will please open and return as per address inside. Stamp inclosed."

But it is not the careless and ignorant alone who clog up the postal machinery and cause the letter men to give way at times to an inclination to use words of lurid tinge and emphatic meaning.

There is a vast and growing army of cranks who seem to live only for the purpose of using the mails in their own peculiar idiotic way. In the operations of some of these there is a studied fiendishness that would suggest a gigantic conspiracy to drive postal clerks to an insane asylum or the clammy tomb.

In the first place there is the puzzle crank, who imagines that two-cent stamp gives him the privilege of displaying, at the expense of the postal officials, his marvelous powers as an enigma maker. This is a fair sample of his work:

"F. (color) H. (Second President.)
"Seventh President,
"10——S——C."

The envelope ought to have gone into the waste basket, but Uncle Sam's orders are to use all possible means to find the party to whom a letter is addressed. So finally a reformed puzzler in the office deciphered the address to be: "Fred H. Adams, Jackson, Tenn."

Crank Who Writes Poetry.

Next in degree of abhorrence in the minds of the letter handlers is the poetical crank. He is strongly impregnated with the idea that all the world loves a poet, and that, above all, postal clerks need some intellectual refreshment to ameliorate the hard grind of daily toil. One of these disciples of Silas Wegg caroled as follows lately:

Oh, carrier with the willing feet,
Deliver this on Fifteth street;
The number, thirteen twenty-four;
The town, New York, and on the door
You'll find, set in a silver frame,
That which you seek—a person's name—
James Ipson Strong—who'd want a better?
And 'tis to him I send this letter.

Another allowed himself to overflow with a fragment built on the same lines as the effervescent college yell. It ran:

Harper's, Harper's,
In Franklin square,
New York, New York,
With haste and care.

The envelope was bulky and surely held manuscript—undoubtedly a poem on spring—but whether that diabolical bark resembling the ululation of a mountain wolf on the war trail was to drive the post office to unusual exertions in forwarding the letter, or whether it was to convince the publishers that author was a rough and ready genius of the west, who would not brook refusal of copy, can only be conjectured.

It would be supposed that the crank bent on addressing a letter to himself and have it come back after a journey around the world resembling a porous plaster from postmarks is dead. It has been announced officially scores of times that letters mailed for such a purpose will be returned to the writer by the speediest route—that is, by local carrier. Still, the round-the-world crank is on the hustle and as eagerly bent on wasting postage stamps.

REBUILDING THE TREASURY.

The contractor who is remodeling part of the United States treasury, has begun the installation of three new vaults in the big building. Two of the old strong rooms in the subbasement and one in the basement are being torn out and will be replaced with modern steel structures, which will be guarded by an elaborate system of electrical devices. In making these alterations, the new vaults will be built in the west side of the treasury, and after their completion the money and express business which now enters the treasury on the Fifteenth street side will go into the building by the west side. One of the old vaults in the basement is to be entirely removed and will not be replaced.

When a small army of architects and artisans finishes the work now in progress the beautiful old structure will show the first material changes since 1869. Architecturally, it will represent a pagan temple, or, as many folk say, the American people's worship of money.

The nucleus of the present building, located where President Jackson, irritated by the procrastination of congress in choosing a site, put his hickory stick down with a thump and exclaimed, "Put 'er there, on that spot," will remain unchanged, but the double stone staircase leading up to the colonnade on the Fifteenth street side has been torn away. Architects said it spoiled the beauty of that side of the building.

The 30 granite monoliths, each of which cost $5,500 and weighs 30 tons, now stand in an unbroken row. They are said to be the finest example of their kind. It required ten men working 60 days to produce each of them, and a solid train of 30 flat cars brought them to Washington from the quarries in Massachusetts.

The appearance of the front of the treasury has been marred, the artists say, by the commercial aspect which the scores of trucks and wagons backed up to the curb gave to it. When it is finished the big three-horse truck, which brings up its rich cargo of currency every day to the vaults from the bureau of engraving and printing, will carry its precious load practically into the building, instead of depositing it on the sidewalk. Express wagons which carry off hundreds of valuable packages will do the same.

To give more space inside the building, all the files of letters and documents will be stored in the old coal vaults under the lawn on the Pennsylvania avenue side, and new coal vaults are being built on the side opposite the White House.

The completed building, as it stands, represents three stages of construction. The nucleus was located by Jackson and finished in 1842. The south wing was finished in 1864. The north wing, finished in 1869, is on the site of the old state department building.

The long colonnade of sandstone, erected in 1864, deteriorated in the southern climate, and was replaced by the present granite monoliths a little more than a year ago.

KICK ON A REFORMATORY.

The members of the Mount Vernon Ladies' association are kicking very hard against the probable establishment three miles from Mount Vernon of the District of Columbia reformatory. Nobody ever wants a reformatory planted any ways near them, anyhow, and it does seem particularly out of place to put such an institution on the ground hallowed by the great Washington; but in this year of our Lord, when money and how to make it is the know-all and be-all of the human creature, you could very easily look for anyone to take the Mount of Olives for golf grounds or an Italian garden, so in all probability the Washington Reformatory will be established as a next-door neighbor of Mount Vernon, if the people who want to put it there have not enough money to pay for the land upon which to establish it.

AUNT PENELOPE MAN-HATER

By JOHN PHILLIP ORTH

My Aunt Penelope is peculiar. She hates men. When I went to visit her at "The Hayfields," as she calls her remote little home, I knew that I would not see a man. She is also averse to newspapers; consequently I prepared for a month of martyrdom and rest cure, but whirlwinds always seem to be in my wake, and the night I arrived things began to happen, and they kept right on happening.

A child—girl of course—that Aunt Penelope had adopted came down with scarlet fever and we were all quarantined, which struck me as rather humorous, for we never went anywhere, and no one ever came past "The Hayfields"—the road ending in a cow path..

I thought maybe I would have the diversion of a flirtation with the country doctor, but Aunt Penelope sent for a woman doctor.

On the day the quarantine was lifted I went for a long walk. I came to a wild ravine and then to a bridge on which was a rustic seat. I sat down and tried to concentrate my eyes and thoughts on a book which I had brought with me, but the day and scenery invited reveries.

I was far away in a beautiful castle of the air when I heard a tramping sound, a rush and loud shouting. I jumped to my feet! Was I asleep, or out of my mind? From the woods beyond were coming hundreds of brown-uniformed men, while down the road came long files of blue uniforms. I heard a bugle, ringing orders shouted, and then the crash of rifles.

I didn't know which way to go or what to do, so I went to the middle of the bridge and screamed. On came the troops with their thundering, roaring racket. Everything was turning black before my eyes when a long, slim man in the brown uniform dashed ahead, caught me up with a strong right arm and swept me down into the ravine just before the opposing forces met on the bridge.

Was I Asleep or Out of My Mind.

In the midst of my terror I was vaguely conscious of my rescuer's epaulets with the two bars.

"What is it?" I gasped. "What does it all mean?"

"It means that we must take this bridge. You are all right now. You won't faint?" he asked anxiously.

"No," I answered, weakly. "You see, where I live—at 'The Hayfields'—we never hear anything, and there are no newspapers, and we've been in quarantine, so I didn't know there was war."

He looked at me oddly.

"Walk on a little distance and rest under that rock," he advised. "I must go back now."

Breathless, on the verge of exhaustion, with unsteady limbs I reached "The Hayfields" and with twitching fingers fumbled at the door.

"Aunt Penelope," I said, faintly, "there's war! The armies are right here. I got into a battle on the bridge. I would have been killed but a captain caught me and bore me away just in time to save my life. Oh, I can't tell you! It was awful!"

I sank into a chair, speechless. Aunt Penelope took my hot, trembling hands.

"She's got the fever," I heard her mutter.

"What ails her?" asked the servant, Susan Hannah, who was deaf.

"She's out of her head," yelled my aunt. "She thinks she's in a battle."

"I was!" I insisted. "The captain said so. He had to leave me to care for the wounded. He's the surgeon. If we could only get a newspaper we'd know what was going on in the world."

"You come to bed," said my aunt, sternly.

I was so tired and so frightened I didn't care whether she believed me or not.

It was sunset time when I awoke. I heard Aunt Penelope yelling to Susan Hannah:

"Dr. Elveretta Hodges has gone away on a vacation. I have sent to a town for a doctor—any doctor. I suppose it will have to be a man! Brother Henry would never forgive me if I didn't have a doctor."

Presently I heard a deep, manly voice below and Aunt Penelope exclaimed: "At last! The doctor!"

She ran downstairs and I heard Susan Hannah come to meet her.

"It's the doctor, but he's in a uniform, and he's got on a sword! Maybe there is war!"

I was so excited and so expectant I sat up in bed, a vivid flush spreading from neck to brow and my eyes glowing.

In a few moments Aunt Penelope came in, looking pale, and followed by my captain-surgeon!

"You see, she's out of her head!" warned Aunt Penelope.

"I am not!" I assured him, indignantly. "I told her about the war and how you saved me from being killed, and so she thought I was delirious and sent me to bed. I went to sleep because I was so tired from running. Do tell us about the war and what it is about!"

"Nonsense!" snorted my aunt. "It's an encampment of the National Guard troops and it was a sham battle, or a maneuver, or something of that sort that you saw."

"It was a lovely one, anyway," I said, ecstatically, thinking it too good to be true that so many men were in proximity to "The Hayfields."

Meantime the military surgeon was feeling my pulse and looking straight into my eyes.

"I find—temperature," he said to my aunt. "The excitement and fright were too much for her nerves. May I have a glass of water and a spoon?"

When she had left the room I reminded him that I was not ill, only frightened.

"But you might be ill," he said, earnestly, "and you know the old adage about prevention. Moreover, I would like to come tomorrow to see how you are, and maybe by the next day a ride would be beneficial."

"Your prescriptions are promising," I said, gravely, "but how did you happen to come? Who told you I was ill?"

"I met a man headed for town, and he told me he was going to fetch a doctor. He also gave me a vivid account of the nature of your illness. Feeling responsible for your condition in a measure, I informed him that I was a doctor, so he showed me the way here. He gave me a graphic description of the entire household. Really, I think a mild restorative would help your nerves."

"Yes, I do feel ill," I replied hastily, hearing Aunt Penelope's approaching steps.

After he had administered a seemingly harmless mixture and had left a few instructions, he took his leave, assuring my aunt that he would call in the morning.

Aunt Penelope seemed so agitated that my contrition awoke, and I was on the point of confessing to the deceptions of my malady when she was called from the room. Susan Hannah immediately entered, looking mysterious.

"Your aunt," she said in a stage whisper, "is all broke up."

"What is it?" I asked.

"Why, ain't you never heard tell about her being crossed in love when she was young?"

"No," I exclaimed, interestedly, finding at last the reason for her antipathy to men.

"Well, she was, and Him a soldier, too. Seein' your man brung it back."

"In the Civil war?"

"Civil war!" scornfully exclaimed Susan Hannah. "It was the war with Cuby, of course. Your aunt's only thirty-five."

"Only!" I thought, with a shudder.

"He deceived her, and so she said she wa'n'a never goin' to hev nuthin' to do with men folks, and she never has. That's why she lives off here."

I had enough new food thought to stay awake that night, but I imagine my military surgeon put a little sleep inducement in his mixture, for I slept until morning. I arose and dressed in my most becoming gown and went serenely down to breakfast.

"Kathleen, are you sure you are all right?" asked my aunt.

I assured her that I was, but I wasn't quite normal when my attending physician came in riding boots and sans sword. Aunt Penelope actually let me receive him alone, and took her agitation to the kitchen.

"You are decidedly better," he approved. "I thought you would be, so I brought a saddle horse for you."

Aunt Penelope's parting admonition had been that I must be gone only half an hour, so I went in the house at luncheon time with doubts as to her attitude toward me, but she hurried past me to the porch.

"Captain!" she called, sweetly.

He was about to mount, but came back and stood at attention, meekly awaiting his sentence.

"I hope," she said, suavely, "that you'll be neighborly while you are in camp. I should be pleased to have you come over this evening."

His eyes brightened and he eagerly accepted her invitation.

In apprehension I sought Susan Hannah. She was also excited and resorted to the stage whisper, although Aunt Penelope was way down in the garden.

"A spell after you had left," she said, "he came!"

"He? Who?"

"Why, whom do you suppose? Major Lyndon. He's a friend of your beau and he told Major Lyndon about you and spoke of your aunt, so over he came this morning to patch it up. It seems there was one of them mislaid letters or some of them things that happen in books, and he thought 'twas her had went back on him. Now it's all fixed fine, and he's a-comin' tonight along with your man."

"A call to arms at 'Hayfields!'" I ejaculated, as I began to concoct a salad dressing.

WAIT FOR THE TIDE.

The political atmosphere will not be so hazy by the next presidential election. An insurgent can then be distinguished from a stand-patter, for he will be found in the same pew with those democrats who believe in more tariff than the "tariff for revenue only." The stand pat republicans and tariff for revenue democrats will join the party of "Long Hairs." The old tariff schedules of the Republicans have created the powerful trusts and the tariff for revenue of the Democrats is a hot bed of howling calamity.

At the next presidential election the extreme old line Democrat and the extreme old line Republican will sit away back and watch the the insurgent progressives do things to a brown turn, and when a few of these new bloods commence a flirtation with some of the old mossbacks, the retired political old-line bards and sages away back in the amen corner of oblivion, will brush the mosquito off his bald head, and stroke his beard, and hunch his retired comrade in "his slats" with his bony elbow.

What influence will the insurgents and progressives play in the political economy of our country? Wait and we shall see.

TRAINS LEAVE RICHMOND FROM THE MACDONALD AVENUE DEPOTS AS FOLLOWS:

Southern Pacific

The subway, at the main Richmond depot on Macdonald avenue, at a cost of $55,000, a permanent mechanism, built in 1909, fixes for all time the central commercial traffic way.

The next improvement will be a modern, enlarged mission style depot for the AVENUE and a local electricized road, an extension north from Berkeley to the depot, looping the loop via West Berkeley to San Francisco, with a 20-cent fare.

KEY ROUTE ON RICHMOND BOULEVARD

The Santa Fe motor cars between Richmond and Oakland are a complete success. Passengers are carried speedily between regular train service. Richmond is the main station and regular stops are made at Richmond Avenue, Sixth Street, and Wall Street near Pullman shops

East Shore & Suburban Ry

—Electric cars. Local service.—

The electric cars give service equal to any modern American city; cars to all parts of the city; transfers at the main junction at Macdonald Avenue and Sixth St.; also at Macdonald Ave. and Twenty-Third. Fare from Broadway and Seventh, Oakland to Richmond, 10c; to Pt. Richmond, 15c.

Richmond Belt Railway

The Belt Line connects Richmond with the commerce of the world through the oceanic and inland shipping with Richmond as a distributing center–via great overland railroads, the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe, which, by traffic arrangements, control the Belt and its wharves, each assuming separate management every alternate year. The largest vessels afloat discharge and take on cargo and meet the Terminal overland railroads, here at deeper water than at San Francisco. The Belt Line also carries factory, warehouse, wharf and other employes, twice daily, via East Shore & Suburban electric cars to and from their homes in Richmond.

KEY ROUTE IN RICHMOND

REPORTED SALE OF EAST SHORE & SUBURBAN RY. BRINGS THE KEY ROUTE TO OUR DOORS

EYES ON NORTH-WEST FERRY

RICHMOND has received a quickening in its commercial activity through the reported merger of the local street railway system to a united corporation in which F. M. Smith, the "borax king," has control with W. S. Tevis, the multi millionaire. A Berkeley capitalist said to a Terminal representative: "This move opens the way for more important extensions and costly development." It is almost a positive assurance that the U. S. dry dock will be built between San Francisco and San Pablo bays at Shelter Cove, North Richmond, where no dredging is required; the channel will be built through our city, the Key Route will put ferry across San Pablo bay to Marin county and the dry dock will be moved in two years. From uncontradicted reports are true the Key Route is on Macdonald avenue. "That's the dope."

SANTA FE.

The Santa Fe Company will soon launch the San Pedro, a modern vessel, both for capacity and speed. It will possibly be arranged to ferry across automobiles. The Santa Fe boasts of the shortest time from Richmond to San Francisco, and they may hold the ribbons until the steel tube is built under the bay, under Sixth st. The San Pedro ferry boat will cost $165,000 more than the San Pablo. This year the Santa Fe will expend $1,000,000 road improvements between Bakersfield and Richmond, and the expenditure on the cut-off to Galveston cost more than $1,000,000 and this is about completed. This company operates the Richmond Belt Railway this year.

KEY ROUTE.

The $200,000,000 merger has included the East Shore & Suburban Railway electric system of Richmond, and F. M. Smith, the "Borax King," is at its head, and this means that the Key Route is at the very door in Richmond and Sixth Street and Macdonald Avenue, is the probable center of all future Key Route operations in Richmond, –north-west via Sixth-st. across San Pablo Bay to Marin County; west to Pt. Richmond and south to Atchison, by feeders, say the financiers.

W. P. CLARKE'S PROMOTION

Much to the surprise of his many social and business friends, Mr. W. P. Clarke, Assistant Cashier of The First National Bank of Richmond, has resigned his position here to accept the management of The Bank of Ceres, a bank organized by Mr. Clarke and his business associates, recently and he will depart for Modesto to assume charge as cashier.

The bank is in a rapidly growing community, rich in monetary resources, and the bank will rapidly develop in commercial resources.

This bank will have good backing and among the larger shareholders are the following gentlemen: Mr. Myron Warner of Warner & Collins, Ceres; Mr. Witmore, Ceres; Mr. W. P. Clarke; Mr. Lloyd MacDonald, President of The Farmers and Merchants National Bank Livermore; Mr. I. W. Hellman, Jr., Vice President Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank, at San Francisco; Mr. Tilson, President Modesto Lumber Company; Mr. Grandi, San Francisco; The First National Bank of Modesto and several others.

While connected with The First National Bank of Richmond, when called upon, he performed very easily duties of cashier. Mr. Clarke, although a very young man, has had very valuable experience in the larger banking houses and in the service of larger corporations and carries in his mind knowledge of the fundamental laws of banking, skill, accuracy and neatness in current accounts; is an expert organizer, for he is a banker and he is honest. The Terminal joins with his many Richmond friends in the regret that Mr. Clarke must leave for a larger field in his own bank. We wish the gentlemen success.

THE BROWNS SCORED.

In the "Blue and Gold" of 1911 appears the following about the Woman's Intercollegiate Tennis Series—1909-10: "California easily won the Women's Intercollegiate Tennis Series for 1909. The tournament was played on the Hearst Hall Courts on the morning of the of the great track meet, April 17th, and resulted in a victory for the 'Blue and Gold,' (University of California.) in both the singles and the doubles matches.

"In the singles, Miss Lillian Brown '12, defeated Miss Smith of Stanford in three sets, by the score of 6—1, 5—7 and 6—1; Miss Ara Harris Brown, '09, disposed of her opponent, Miss Purdy, in easier fashion, by the score of 6—1, 6—2.

"The doubles matches were between a team composed of the sisters, Misses Brown, for the Blue and Gold, and Miss Bundy and Miss Haywards for the Cardinal.

"This was an easy event, California winning by the decisive score of 6—2 and 6—2."—The winners are the daughters of the late Dr. Le Roy D. Brown, former State Commissioner of Common Schools of Ohio, President of the Department of Superintendence National Educational Association, President of the University of Nevada–brother of Thomas P. Brown, Esq., of the department of education with Hon. Edward Hyatt, State Superintendent of Public Instruction at Sacramento, and niece of ye editor. Miss E. L. Brown, athletic instructor, frequently played with her cousins, the U. C. champions.

FAMILY REUNION.

T. C. McHugh and Mrs. Ella McHugh and son, Thomas McHugh, Jr., cousins of Mrs. Warren Brown and Miss E. L. Brown, and Mrs. Josephine Siegfried, a wealthy woman of Bellingham, interested in control of valuable gold mines, an aunt of Mrs. Brown, made a tour of the Oregon, California and Washington coast, where Mr. McHugh was making adjustments of trade with wholesale houses in the principal cities. Mr. McHugh is a millionaire, having taken Horace Greeley's advice, came west from Cincinnati to grow up with the country. He is owner of steamships, Alaska salmon canneries, packing and warehouses, at Bellingham, a large dry goods house employing one hundred clerks there, in a large interest and a candy factory at Seattle. Recently, ten days ago, purchased, a two-thirds interest in a property near U. S. Grant Hotel, San Diego. Mr. McHugh employs as large a roll of workers as the Pullman Car Company now. He has his eye on Richmond which he says is a city of a bright future.

Mr. McHugh is much interested in his family. His lively son Thomas McHugh, Jr., about one year old, he says resembles his ma when awake and his pa when asleep, and Mrs. McHugh much resembles Mrs. Brown and Eleanor Lorraine. Although the drawing room of 'The President' was placed at the disposal of the McHugh party for the return to Portland, time was too short even for a visit to Richmond, so return was made via Southern Pacific. Before departure, it was arranged to have a family reunion of these wings of the family tree, so the Terminal family were guests in San Francisco at a swell dinner.

There were seated at the banquet table Mrs. Josephine Siegfried, Mr. and Mrs. T. C. McHugh, Thomas McHugh, Jr., (of course, why not?) Dr. and Mrs. Warren B. Brown, Miss Eleanor L. Brown and Louis G. Brown. This was a most enjoyable affair.

To Cure Poverty.

There is a rational way and a fool way of curing poverty. The rational way is to recognize that the world is full of magnificent supplies and to try to develop in the poor man a better kind of wants—i. e.: to change his low thinking into high, to replace his love of mud and its by-products by a love of the spirit and spiritual qualities. The fool way is to heap upon the soul, already oversupplied, a mass of money, houses, drapery, fancy balls, golf balls, and highballs. Such a wretch has not riches — riches have him, and usually choke the life out of him.

Silent Forests of Cuba.

Silence reigns in the vast forests of Cuba. Says a traveler: "No beast crashes through the undergrowth, no bird sings in the branches, no wind sighs through the mighty tops. The living creatures of that world glance noiselessly through the air or glide stealthily through the heavy, sound deadening verdure." Cuba has practically no song birds; they are merely gaudy creatures of the ballroom. She is happy also in having no venomous snakes and few ... of any sort.

Manners of the Boy.

For some reason many mothers do not give the same attention to the manners of their sons as to those of their daughters. Yet the boy's training is even more important than those of the girl. The majority of young men leave their homes shortly after they come of age, and many leave before that period, and they come into contact, into intimate association frequently, with men who have had but little training in the niceties of life, and all too frequently these evil communications corrupt the good manners of the more fortunate class. But the boy who is trained to courtesy from his childhood can be trusted in any environment.

HOW COCOANUTS ARE USED

Immense Value of the Trees and How the Crop Is Garnered.

A cocoanut tree in the Islands of Trinidad and Tobago begins to produce nuts in four or five years after planting, and reaches maturity in twelve or fourteen years. The average life of a healthy tree is fifty years, often very much longer. The production of nuts does not average more than one hundred a mature tree. At present cocoanuts for export are invoiced at from $13 to $22, a probable average of $16 a thousand, copra at 4 to 5 cents a pound, and the oil at 90 cents a gallon. The nuts are mostly shipped to Philadelphia and New York, the copra to Europe and the oil to the other West India islands.

Cocoanut trees are planted about 150 to the acre, and fifteen to eighteen feet apart. Unskilled labor, coolie labor chiefly, is paid 30 to 50 cents a day, while the pickers get 90 cents a thousand, and a higher wage if the trees are very tall. In some sections the trees are being affected with bud rot, but every effort known to science is being used to limit the spread of the disease. It is not, however, generally prevalent, but works most injury in sections where there is too much moisture. Insect pests have also to be contended with, but these thus far have not caused much alarm among the producers. The natural annual death rate of the trees, as stated by a leading horticulturist, does not exceed five a thousand, and 5 to 10 per cent in sections of plantations where the bud rot prevails.

The cocoanut industry is considered very profitable, and is rapidly growing here. The largest producer grows 5,000,000 nuts a year, another 3,000,000, while the remainder are mostly small producers.

The shells are looked upon as waste, except as they rot and become fertilizer, or when used on the large estates for road making. An effort was made a few years ago to utilize the fiber as a marketable product, but the effort proved unsuccessful, probably because it was not carried out on the right lines.

Pleasant Meals.

Shakespeare very truly wrote that "unquiet meals make ill digestions," and meal times should never be made unpleasant. Wives must not entertain their husbands at dinner with the day's domestic grievances about children or servants, nor ask for money, and husbands must not retail the worries of the office, the fall in stocks or their own personal troubles. Be cheerful at meals, everything will then taste better—and digest better; leave the worries in the drawing room —you can return to tackle them ever so much better if you banish them from the dining room.—Home.

Good Manners a Requisite.

A brilliant mind, the possession of unusual talents and worldly success are all to be desired, but nothing will compensate for a lack of good manners, while the possession of good manners will frequently make amends for a certain lack of book knowledge, talent and world success.

Black Paper Protector.

Wrap gold or silver trimmings in black paper and you will find that they will remain untarnished through many seasons. All frocks should be wrapped in black paper also. A good quality of tissue paper should be used, and if this is not practicable, use a heavier grade.

Real Kind of Man.

A man who is worth calling a man is not the man who tries to see how much he can get, but the man who is trying to see how much he can do without.

Prejudices.

We can forgive any man his prejudices provided they don't conflict with ours.—Life.

A Journalist's "Copy."

The late Mr. Levy of the Daily Telegraph once asked Sala if he had any objection to his copy being edited in the office. "Mr. Levy," he replied, "I am like a butcher. I sell you so much meat—to me it is a matter of profound indifference whether you serve it fried, boiled or roasted."—Recollections of Mrs. T. P. O'Connor.

The Enthusiast.

It was after the football game. Amid the plaudits of 50,000 enthusiastic spectators the full back of the victorious team had been carried from the field on the shoulders of his joy-crazed cohorts. He was the hero of the hour. By his unaided efforts defeat had been turned into glorious victory within one minute of the call of time.

He was in the hands of his rubbers when his chum entered the dressing room. "I had the pleasure of sitting next to your best girl during the game," said his chum.

"Did she enthuse over by my playing?" asked the star full back with that beautiful modesty so characteristic of the modern gridiron gladiator.

"Well—er—" replied the chum, not without a certain hesitancy, "when you made your 45 yard run for the last touchdown, and the flags were flying, and we were all yelling ourselves into a state of idiocy, and everybody felt sure of your place on the All-American team, she turned to me and said:

"'Hasn't he beautiful hair?'"

Screwed Up Their Courage.

It was the hour of family confidences. Mr. Buggins had finished his evening papers, and in slippers and dressing gown was toasting his toes before the asbestos fire log, while the wife of his bosom was putting a few stitches in the table cover she was doing for Aunt Mary, and which she hoped to have finished by Christmas.

"I did something today that I've been screwing up my courage to do for a long time," said Mrs. Buggins.

"Yes?" said Mr. Buggins, mildly interested. "What was it?"

"You know that odious Mrs. Bjones?" replied Mrs. Buggins. "Well, I paid her a call that I have owed for nearly a year."

"My dear, I can sympathize with you," said Mr. Buggins. "Today, by a strange coincidence I paid that odious Mr. Bjones a bill I had owed him for quite as long."

HAVE THEIR OWN SYSTEMS

Business Secrets That Seem Unimportant, but Are Guarded With Much Jealousy.

"Since I began to meet people who won't let anybody see how they do a thing because they have a secret method which they are not ready to divulge just yet I have been like a crazy woman," said the housekeeper. "There are plenty of those budding geniuses doing odd jobs about town. One of them came to our house the other day to mend a suitcase. It was an easy job. He could have taken the thing into the storeroom and mended it in half an hour, but instead of that he insisted upon taking it home. He had a secret process for doing things like that, he said, and preferred not to work where anybody else could find out how he did it.

"While my curiosity over the suitcase was still seething a woman who is quite handy at draughting patterns stirred it still more by refusing to cut out a waist pattern at my house because she has her own method of cutting that she isn't ready to advertise just yet.

"Right on the heels of that a carpet renovator was proof against all blandishments to come to the house to take spots out of a rug. He has a cleansing formula which he will not take chances on giving away by doing work outside of his own shop, so the rug went to him.

"The other day a man came around to fight water bugs. In a sense I had him at my mercy because he couldn't take the bugs home, but he did the next best thing and ordered me to stay out of the kitchen while the process of extermination was going on. Was the process dangerous? I asked. No, it wasn't dangerous, but it was a secret which he didn't wish to reveal, not even to an innocent housekeeper like me.

"And so they come and go through all the trades, every man studying out a system better than anybody else's. When all those geniuses let their ideas loose upon the world something like a revolution ought to take place."

Shock and the Hair.

The iconoclast is abroad again, and persons who may have been looking ahead to a time when they should experience such fright as would immediately turn their hair from nature's possibly objectionable color to snowy white seem doomed to disappointment. An important German medical publication, the Deutsche Medizinische Wochenschrift, quotes Doctor Steida as reviving an old more than suspicion that whitening of dark hair over night is in reality a sort of withdrawal symptom, due to sudden deprivation of the walnut stain or whatever dyestuff is in daily recourse; whence, according to Steida, the frequency of alleged cases after incarceration. Doctor Steida says it is no longer believed by experts that psychic traima ever has caused this transformation. Mental shock is extremely common, but blanching of the hair at a stroke is so rare that a list of alleged cases may be quickly compiled. The expert here quoted admits that psychic shock may appear to cause blanching of the hair within a comparatively short time—a few weeks, perhaps—but he deals only with alleged instantaneous cases.

Repenting at Leisure.

A. J. Drexel Biddle tells this:

"Elisha Chew took me aside one evening. 'I have,' he said, '$6,000 laid by and I can't decide whether to buy an aeroplane or to get married and take a honeymoon trip.'

"'Do you love the girl?' said I.

"'O, yes; very much,' said he.

"'Then,' I added, 'marry by all means and let the aeroplane go to the deuce.'

"A few months later I met Chew again. He had just returned from a honeymoon tour of California.

"'Well, Chew,' said I, 'aren't you glad you took my advice? A good wife is much better than an aeroplane, eh?'

"'No doubt that is true,' said Chew. 'At the same time, if my wife happened to be an aeroplane, 10 to 1 I'd be thinking about this time that they'd worked off a third rate machine on me.'"

Willing to Oblige

"Look here," roared the angry man who had bought a lot of suburban real estate, "that ground you sold me is under water, and there are actually little fish swimming about."

"O, I'll fix that all right," assured the oily tongued agent.

"Then you'll give me another lot or return the money?"

"Not exactly that, but I'll send you out some fishing tackle to catch the fish."

Trials of the Great.

"Aren't you often bored by people who rush up to you in a crowd and loudly announce that they used to know you when you hadn't a dollar?"

"Yes. They are almost as bad as the ones who are always trying to get me to let their children snapshot me with their hands resting on my shoulders. Oh, I see you have your ..."

Rails at Society.

Lady Violet Greville, speaking on the subject of society recently, said: "Our present society has only one desire in common, the desire to get on, only one love, the love of money; only one vice, selfishness. The great feature of the age is indifferentism, which proclaims itself in laxity of principle, a disregard of duty, a desire for liberty verging on license, and a lazy contempt for religion. Society is not immoral. It has not the strength or ardor to be vicious; it is simply a shifting, struggling mass of unexcited, jaded, restless beings, void of character and dignity—having flung away the attributes which once made it lordly and prosperous—grasping at shifty shadows, crazy, faddy, discordant, and entirely without power and prestige."

Cannot Agree.

"And what is your reason for wanting a divorce?"

"My husband and I cannot agree."

"But he wants a divorce, too, he told me so this morning."

"The wretch! He shan't have it!"

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PEYROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

A Tender Conscience.

HER PROOF OF IDENTITY

Cashier of Telegraph Company Thinks It Sufficient and Pays the Money.

Many are the stories told regarding ladies who visit banks, telegraph offices and similar places and are asked to conform to certain prescribed business usages, such as properly indorsing a check or presenting proof of identity. One of the latest is told by the Cleveland Leader in Town Talk: "Several days ago a handsome woman, handsomely dressed and accompanied by two small boys, called at the Western Union office to cash a telegraph money order she had received from her husband, who was in Chicago on business. Cashier John H. Cox asked the woman all the usual questions about identification, but with no satisfactory results. Absolutely she had no documentary proof of her identity. As a last resort, Mr. Cox said: 'Now, madam, I would like very much to give you the money this order calls for. Can't you prove to me some way that you are Mrs. Blank?' Hesitating a moment, the woman exclaimed: 'Why, yes, of course I can. How stupid of me not to think of it before.' Then, pointing to the two boys, said: 'These, sir, are my sons.' She got the money."

THOROUGHBRED ANIMALS AND PLANTS.

"There is as much difference between thoroughbred and ordinary plants as between thoroughbred and ordinary animals." This statement is made by D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, the greatest flower and vegetable breeders in the country, and appears in their 1911 Annual Catalogue just issued. They argue for the great value and economy of thoroughbred seeds. "Any fundamental natural law which applies to animals applies equally to plants." A good cow (i. e. a thoroughbred) eats no more than a poor one, but may give twice as much butter-fat. "Good blood" makes as much difference with corn as with cows. But thoroughbred plants, like thoroughbred animals, are not produced in one or two generations, for no matter how superior an individual of common origin may be, its progeny are as a rule like the general run of its antecedents. Hence the need for seedsman like D. M. Ferry & Co. They have experience, the best plant breeding equipment in the United States, and the business acumen to sell only such seeds as have been bred from the choicest stocks for many generations.

D. M. Ferry & Co's Seed Annual for 1911 may be had free of charge by writing to them at Detroit, Michigan. It contains much of interest for those who think.
